THOSE POSTALABUILDING DEFECTS

Former Superintendent Steward De Mr. Thomas C. Steward, former supering endent of construction of the new post office building in this city, returned to Washington this week, after a month's absence. His attention was called by a rep-resentative of The Star to a news item pubsence. His attention was called by a representative of The Star to a news item published Tuesday last in reference to the falling of a portion of the big skylight at the post office. He made the following statement in reference to the matter:

"The assertion from any source whatever that the work which 'collapsed' on last Sunday was done under my superintendence is a falsehood. The roof, including the upper skylight, was put in place, accepted and paid for prior to my reinstatement as superintendent. June 7, 1887, and all I had to do with that skylight during my last administration was to call attention of the department repeatedly to its defects, and urge most earnestly that they be renaired.

"The correspondence on this subject extended over a considerable period and with the present officials in the Treasury Department. If those in charge of the records have defective memories as to the particular dates on which certain work on the post office building was put in place a reference to the files would make it all clear, provided there was the least desire to state facts and do me justice.

"The heavy wire guard with iron frame that fell last Sunday, smashing several panes of glass in the lower skylight, is only one of about two thousand of its kind, all having the same uncertain and precarious support, at a height of nearly 150 feet above the heads of over 400 clerks and carriers employed in the central portion on the first floor of the building. What occurred on last Sunday is liable to be repeated any day, without the slightest warning, and it can hardly be expected that the results will always be as harmless as in this case.

"On my first visit to the top of the building after my reinstatement as superintending case.

"On my first visit to the top of the build-

case.

"On my first visit to the top of the building after my reinstatement as superintendent I expressed my astonishment to the gentleman who was with me at the filmsy construction of several portions of this immense skylight.

"As The Star has suggested, an investigation by a congressional committee, promptly begun and faithfully pursued, would reveal a condition of affairs in the supervising architect's office that will be astounding. Nor will it be possible to shift the responsibility for the rank incompetency that exists there today to any past administration. A prominent treasury official, in speaking to me yesterday of this matter, expressed himself thus: The only cure for this evil is to abolish the whole office and begin anew. It is safe to assume that if all the facts were known to Congress—the true inwardness of the situation—this heroic treatment would be promptly applied. "I am on record with many pages of reports concerning the troublesome windows, ports concerning the troublesome windows, to which reference is made in the news item in The Star of Tuesday, but it is likely item in The Star of Tuesday, but it is likely that an effort will be made to hold me responsible for these defects. I sent a challenge to the Treasury Department more than a year and a half ago for an impartial, searching investigation, based on the official records relating to this building, in order that the credit and blame might be fixed where each properly belongs. If undertaken and conducted by competent men along the lines indicated I care not how soon it begins."
